Cue the laughtrack, 'cause Charlie Sheen is getting the last chuckle.

Again.

The scandal-scarred TV star, who's being paid an estimated $29 million a season to traipse around the "Two and a Half Men" set in shorts as the skeezy musician Charlie Harper, just pulled a skeevier one on the justice system.

On Monday, armed with a team of high-priced lawyers, Sheen reached another nadir in Hollywood junk justice (see OJ and Robert Blake) by cutting a deal with prosecutors in Aspen. He'll avoid jail time -- and responsibility -- after holding a knife to wife Brooke Mueller's throat last Christmas. Classy dude.

Oh, wait, Sheen was sentenced to 30 days in the tony Promises Treatment Center in LA but . . . wait for it . . . he might not even have to serve his sentence, since he's already accumulated 93 days at Promises this year.

Now that's funny.

"Apparently celebs like Sheen get Monopoly justice -- a get-out-of-jail-free card because they're on a TV series," says Sue Moss, a high-powered family lawyer with Chemtob Moss Forman & Talbert, who's seen too many battered wives and too much heartache.

"Whenever they make a determination of what a sentence should be, the first thing they look at is past history -- and not only does Sheen have a past history with [his wife], but a past history with his former wife and other allegations from other women," Moss says.

"In his case, this will happen again," she says. Yes, but the Aspen DA argued that Sheen committed his "misdemeanor third-degree assault" in Colorado, his first offense in that state -- and that "Nobody on their first offense goes to jail for 30 days."

"That's an absolutely ridiculous argument -- that just because he's committed a crime in another state and not in this state he should be held to a lesser standard," Moss says.

"I've worked with a lot of domestic-violence survivors and each one says, 'Will the judge take it seriously?' The reason they have doubt . . . is cases like this, where a celebrity with a repeated pattern of beating up girlfriends or wives, gets a slap on the wrist and may even benefit from the publicity."

Even Charlie's drug-addled, show-biz colleague, Lindsay Lohan, managed to tough it out for 14 days in an LA jail for an old DUI case -- before starting her court-ordered 90 days in rehab.

Yet Sheen negotiated a new deal for "Two and a Half Men" while his case was ongoing. Show producer Warner Bros. punished him by doubling his salary.

"This is what we're teaching the public -- that bad behavior reaps benefits," Moss says.

Indeed.
