

Man of the woods: Donald Trump Jr chops wood and starts a campfire as he shows off his dad skills on social media while enjoying weekend with the kids at upstate estate

Donald Trump Jr managed to perform his fatherly duties while also showing off some impressive outdoor skills over the weekend.

The father-of-five was at his weekend estate in upstate New York with his children, and took advantage of the nice weather to get his brood out for some fun in the sun.

Among the activities the group enjoyed was some ATV racing, wood chopping and campfire building, to name just a few.

This all comes as Don Jr and Vanessa are in the process of separating after 12 years of marriage.

Don Jr also managed to get a little time away from the kids as well, sneaking a workout in on Sunday.

David Feureisen of the firm Bartels & Feureisen will be handling the split for Vanessa, who opted for a lawyer based in White Plains, which is close to the family's residence upstate.

Some are also now wondering if Vanessa could be called to testify against her estranged husband should he be indicted in the Russia probe.

'In theory, Vanessa could talk about what Donald Trump Jr. knew about the Russia investigation if spousal privilege doesn't apply, but that would take the divorce into a dark place,' said Joshua Forman, a celebrity divorce attorney at Partner at Chemtob, Moss & Forman.

'However, she may have signed a prenuptial agreement with a confidentiality clause and would thus be precluded from speaking during or after marriage.'

He went on to explain: 'If there isn't a confidentiality clause and there isn't a prenu in place, then once the divorce is complete, she could if allowable by the law in the jurisdiction she is called to testify in be compelled to testify.'
